

Abstract

This topic looks at the reality of the strategic balance in the Gulf Arab region, especially after 2003. And can be verified from the reality of the strategic balance in the Gulf region as it is through the study of several indicators related to human capacity quantity and quality of the GCC countries, Iraq, and Iran, as well as economic capacity, and conventional and non-conventional military capabilities.

And then on the basis of data study of these indicators, we explain the nature of the strategic balance in the Gulf region.

The importance of the search statement strengths and weakness factors in the capabilities of the Arabian Gulf states, individually and collectively, and to make suggestions thereon.

Despite owning the Gulf Arab region combined human, economic and military capabilities, but they failed to employ them for the benefit of achieving a strategic balance to serve the supreme national interests with the countries of the region, especially with Iran, as we find that the foreign international obvious intervention in directing the security policies, including raising its differences with some lead to the threat of instability that balance.

This structure has been divided into search introduction, three chapters and a conclusion, and as follows:

- Chapter I. human capacity for the Gulf region.
- Chapter II - the economic capacity of the Arabian Gulf region.
- Chapter III military capabilities of the Gulf region.