

Abstract

The energy security occupied prominent position in Russian since the 1990s of last century and this trend enhanced in Vladimir Putin presidency in 2000 who put the document of Russian strategic prospects. This document emphasis on prominent importance to Russian energy security as it the major resource to country and play vital role on European Union, since the latter considered the major consumer to Russian Gas. This enable Russia from played major role regionally and internationally. Since Russian foreign policy played major role in energy security and in establishing international partnerships. In addition to that the energy sector strengthen Russian strategic performance in regions that have strategic importance like Ukraine and Syria.

The importance of study emerged from the correlation between the energy security and Russian strategic performance, since this sector play Strategic importance on Russian performance. Consequently the thesis based on following problem ( what the effect of the energy security on the Russian strategic performance). In the light of this problem the thesis deals with the following assumption (there were dialectic relationship between security energy and Russian strategic performance 2000).

The thesis divided on four chapters, as well as introduction and abstract. However the first chapter deals with the theoretical context to study, while the second concern with the foundations of Russian strength. The third highlighted the stages and limitation of Russian Strategic performance. And finally the fourth the case of studies to Russian strategic performance (Ukraine as a regional case study and Syria as an international case study)